With his first solo show, 'Everything, Tomorrow', photographer Sam Hiscox creates an environment wherein the idiosyncrasies and imperfections of our immediate surroundings and intimate relationships remind us what it means to be human and to love. In a political, social and cultural climate constantly in flux, it becomes easy to lose ourselves in the pursuit of materialistic goals and yearnings for success. Hiscox presents an alternative: slowing down time with his camera, he affords his audience a moment for reflective introspection. Bringing us back down to earth with a revitalised emotional awareness, the photographer reminds us of the potently beautiful web of relationships that intrinsically connects us all.

Sam Hiscox (b. 1984) lives in London. He has been drawn to making photographs from a very young age and has shaped his natural instinct into a career. Over the past decade he has produced a catalogue of personal work focused on delivering poignancy to the basic human experience. His genuine and honest works portray friends, family, intimacy, relationships and solitude in surreal yet familiar spaces with the aim of bringing a tangible and relatable sense of comfort in knowing that every facet of our emotional and physical existence has equal place in our world and his.
